Property overview

A subtle homage to Phuket's colonial heritage is thoughtfully woven throughout the design. Vintage-inspired details, decorative paneling, and curated textures echo the island's storied past, resulting in interiors that feel timeless, evocative, and refined. In the master planning, Mary Pakamard places strong emphasis on harmony with the natural environment. Villas are nestled among mature trees, preserving the landscape's integrity and fostering a sense of seclusion and calm. While a unified architectural language ties the project together, each villa features slight variations in layout, creating visual interest while maintaining cohesion. Architectural elements highlight openness, natural materials, and a seamless indoor-outdoor flow. High vaulted ceilings, framed by exposed wooden beams, impart a sense of volume and grandeur, while retaining the warmth and relaxed elegance of a tropical resort. The villa interiors blend modern luxury with subtle colonial references. Rich wood, hand-crafted ceramics, and contemporary fixtures—such as sleek lighting and premium appliances—create a striking balance between past and present. Wooden cabinetry and bar stools evoke a warm, tropical sensibility, while brass accents and artisan tiles nod to Phuket's colonial roots. This fusion of tradition and innovation is also evident in the bathrooms, where oak ceilings, bespoke vanities, and cabinetry made from Thai teak pay tribute to classic local craftsmanship and materials used in colonial-era homes. Natural elements continue to shape the design language. Earthy tones, organic textures, and large floor-to-ceiling windows immerse residents in the lush surroundings, forging an effortless connection with nature. Outdoor areas are designed with tranquility and balance in mind. Traditional architectural elements are reinterpreted through a modern lens, with carefully chosen materials—such as natural stone around the pool—harmonising with the verdant landscape. The result is a serene and sophisticated sanctuary where modern living and timeless beauty coexist in perfect equilibrium.
